South Africa Arrests 50 In Sweep of Black Town

JOHANNESBURG - Police and army trucks rolled into the black township of Tembisa oortheast of Johannesburg on Tuesday in what authorities described as an anti-crime operation. It was the latest action against persistent unrest in South Africa. Violence has claimed more than a bundred lives since early September and has involved black opposition groups ranging from high school students to trades unions.

Witnesses said bundreds of camouflaged police and soldiers took part in the operation, which followed a larger, joint search of Sebo-keng township, 40 miles (65 kilometers) to the south, two weeks ago. The harsh measures seemed to reflect official alarm and anger at the intractability of the unrest.

At least 31 persons died in the strike-related unrest, and prominent black labor leaders, who had previously sought an economic rather than political thrust for their movements, were subsequently de-tained in a display of official anger at their involvement in a stoppage that slowed South Africa's industrial heart.

Wimesses said police and army units handed out pamphlets from armored trucks Tuesday urging students to return to school after a protracted boycott and telling adults to return to work. Hundreds of thousands of black high school students across South Africa have been boycotting classes for months to protest the segregated educational system.

While the police said the sweep through Tembisa was directed at criminals, the assumption among many commentators was that it was designed to intimidate blacks who had supported last week's strike. The strike took whites by surprise with its wide support among ordinary workers.

OAU Is Told Africa's Future Is Grim

WORLD BRIEFS

ADDIS ABABA. Ethiopia (AP) — The head of the Organization of African Unity said Tuesday that Africa faced an "unparalleled socioeconomic decline" that was a product of drought, food shortages declining production and mounting debt.

The OAU summit meeting resumed Tuesday without Morocco, which withdrew from the organization Monday to protest the seating of the representatives of the Western Sahara independence movement, Moroo co has been fighting a guerrilla war against insurgents of the Polisario Front seeking independence for the Western Sahara. Except for Zaire, which temporarily suspended its membership in support of Morocco, the other delegations refused to join a boycott.

Peter Onu, the OAU's secretary-general, told delegates to the 20th summit of the OAU that "a very grim situation faces the OAU, a situation that requires some form of radical solutions by our member

"An overview of our economic situation during the past year," he said "reaffirms the need of our countries to restructure our econ ensure that they develop a self-sustaining growth process."

Baby Fae Is Put Back on Respirator

LOMA LINDA, California (UPI) - Baby Fac, the infant struggling to survive with a baboon heart, was placed back on a respirator Tuesday and given additional medication to suppress her body's effort to reject the animal organ.

"Baby Fae is continuing to experience the initial graft rejection episode," Joyce McClintock, a spokeswoman for the Loma Linda University Medical Center, said. "This has resulted in somewhat diminished heart function." Doctors reported Sunday that Baby Fae had undergone a moderate "rejection episode" late last week, which, they said, had been controlled by medication. Doctors have said since the transplant operation on Oct. 26, when Baby Fac received the heart of a baboon, they expected that the baby's natural immune system would try to reject the heart several times, a normal expectation even in human-to-buman transplants.

Le Monde May Name Operations Chief

PARIS (AP) — A group of shareholders of Le Monde has proposed naming a regional publisher as director of operations to lead the evening newspaper out of the worst crisis it has faced in its 40-year history, a member of the group said Tuesday.

The shareholder, who requested anonymity, said the group decided on the move Monday night in response to what some members of paper; staff saw as a threat by management to file for bankruptcy if unions did not accept deep wage cuts. Like other French national newspapers, Le Monde has been hit with a combined loss of advertising revenue and

The administrative position of director for operations would be reestablished and given to Bernard Roux, 49, publisher of Courrier Picard in Amiens, in northern France. He would work with the publisher and editor, André Laurens. Mr. Roux took over Courrier Picard in 1978 and redesigned it, using more graphics and increasing appeal to younger

CAPE CANAVERAL, Florida (AP) - Managers of the space shuttle Discovery agreed Tuesday with a recommendation by the ship's spacewalkers that they alternot a new, untried recovery plan when they go after a second stranded satellite on Wednesday.

Under the plan, an astronaut, Dale Gardner, is to jet over to the Westar

6 satellite, capturing it with a polelike device, then guide it to another astronaut. Joe Allen, who will be on a work station fixed to the end of the shuttle's robot arm. With Mr. Allen grasping the 21-foot-tall (6.3-metertall) satellite firmly by an antenna and a crossbar. Mr. Gardner is to attach a docking collar on the base of the craft so that it can be berthef manually in the cargo bay.

Yugoslav Student Denies Conspiracy

BELGRADE (Reuters) - Gordan Jovanovic, a philosophy student on trial here, told a court Tuesday that conspiracy charges against him and five other intellectuals were "groundless."

Mr. Jovanovic, 23. the fourth of the six defendants to reply in court to the indictment, said friends had met several times at his apartment for informal discussions on a variety of topics but there was nothing illegal about the gatherings or anything that threatened the state.

The charges "are groundless," Mr. Jovanovic, the youngest of the defendants, said. The six are accused of conspiring in private meetings from 1977 to undermine Yugoslavia's Communist political system. The

880 U.K. Miners Return to Work

LONDON (AP) - Striking miners battled police Tuesday, but failed to stop nearly 900 more miners from going back to work. At least 40 policemen were injured in the elashes.

The back-to-work campaign gathered momentum with promises by the National Coal Board of a £1,400 [$1,764] package of pre-Christmas bonuses and wages and with the repeated breakdown of negotiations.
Coal board officials said two more mines began producing coal for the first time since the strike was called March 12, bringing to five number back in production since Monday. Since the 3-percent goal seems unattainable, Mr. Nunn says European governments should squeeze more "output" from their budgets in the form of firepower and survivable airfields.

The issue has come into sharp fixus because of the Reagan administration's big military budgets. The United States plans to spend $100 billion over the next five years for fighter aircraft and ammunition

Sharon's Case Against Magazine Opens

By David Margolick
New York Times Service
NEW YORK — A major U.S. news organization reported on the purported misconduct of a prominent military leader in a far-off, unpopular war. The official said his reputation had been blackened by the charge, which be denied. So be filed a multimillion-dollar libel suit against the media giant in U.S. Disirict Court.

It alt sounds like General Wilrail sounds like Ceneral Wil-liam C. Westmoreland's case against CBS. But it describes an-other, equally explosive legal bat-tle, that began Tuesday six floors up in the federal courthouse in New York City: the libel suit of the former Israeli defense minister Ari-el Sharon against Time magazine.

Mr. Sharon, the architect of fsrael's war in Lebanon and now minister of industry and commerce, has asserted that he was libeled in 1983 by a Time article suggesting that he condoned, if not directly encouraged, the September 1982 massacre by Christian Phalangists of Palestinians and Lebanese in the Sabra and Chatila refugee camps near

Last year, shortly after the article appeared, Mr. Sharon filed a $50illion lawsuit against Time. He said that not only had he been defamed, but also that to accuse any Jew of mass murder was a "blood libel" against Israel and the Jewish people.

The article, he said, had injured his political career and his good

"I brought it to court because I knew that the day must come and steps must be taken that you will never dare again to libel," Mr. Sharon told lawyers for Time during a deposition. "Not the Jewish people, not Israel, and not me not you and not any other newspa-

Time has called the assertions "an attempt by a foreign politician to justify his conduct of a war by his state and to enhance his political reputation," as well as to "punish criticism of Israel's conduct during the invasion and occupation of Lebanon."

More than to vindicate his hon-Gould says it is representing him or, Time has said, Mr. Sharon is for a "substantially reduced" fee. seeking "to shed his responsibility and under his command."

Technically, the Sharon litigation hinges on two issues of fact: Did, as Time reported, a secret ap-

Sharon discussed the Phalangists' need for revenge after the assassi-nation of the Lebanese presidentelect, Bashir Gemayel? And second, even if the appendix does not so state, is the charge still true?

Not surprisingly, however, given the volatility of the issues and per-sonalities involved in the case, its dimensions have gone well beyond a few discreet legal and factual is-sues. If the Westmoreland case has become a couriroom re-enactment of the Vietnam War, Sharon vs. Time promises to do the same for Israel's war in Lebanon.

Time is represented by Cravath, Swaine & Moore. Cravath is opposed by another of New York's largest law firms, Shea & Gouli, and the case involves two of the city's best-known corporate litigators: Thomas D. Barr of Cravath, who successfully defended IBM in its fight against a federal antitrust action, and Milton Gould. They will argue the case before a jury of four men and two women, none of whom is Jewish.

Time's legal fees in the case al-ready exceed $1 million. Mr. Sharon has said he has sold his house in Tel Aviv to pay for legal expenses, although Shea &

They are claiming that David against Mr. Sharon and had previously been disciplined for poor work. His report was unchallenged. they have said, both because of ineffective editing and fact-check-ing and what they have called the magazine's "vicious anti-Sharon and anti-Israel bias."

The Israeli government, citing national security concerns, has refused to permit the parties to see the secret annex, known as Appendix B. along with other key documents collected by the Kahan Commission, which investigated the Sabra and Chatila massacres.

In addition, the Israeli attorney general, Yitzhak Zamir, barred five prominent military officials earlier this week from testifying at the tri-

Reagan and the Russians

The word is that President Reagan is being presented an options paper by Secretary of State George Shultz and National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane. It is described as giving the president an orderly basis oo which to choose what to emphasize in foreign policy in his second term. The effort is commendable. Events have moved on, and the president cannot just say more of the same. He surely learned the first time around that it is not enough simply to declare good intentions in a dozen policy areas. Choices must be made of where to invest presidential time, energy and commitment. Nuclear nooproliferation, which is one of the second-term opuons, is a characteristic area, and a vital one, where in the absence of a firm presidential interest matters drift - toward proliferation.

At the same time, Mr. Reagan needs to do more than select large-bore policy options from a paper. On the central issue of foreign policy. Soviet-American relations, he needs to fit means to cods: to decide what particular steps to take and, specifically, to decide who among his lieutenants is to be in charge. Because the plain truth is that Mr. Reagan is eurrently presiding over an administration immobilized by its internal tensions on all questions of consequence having to do with the Soviet-American strategie balance.

There is talk in some parts of the adminis-tration of naming a "czar" for arms control, presumably meaning someone with the au-thority to cut through departmental and bu-reaucratic conflicts and make things happen. Mr. Reagan says he contemplates appointment of an arms control "eovoy." The secretary of state argues that arms control must be managed "in one place" — the State Depart-ment. All this makes plain that a lot of people. including the president, feel a need for some new arrangement to manage the conflicts on this question in his administration. Its leading figures could agree oo a first-term arms buildup but are far from agreement on whether and how to convert rearmament into a more stable disposition between the two great powers.

The urgent question, however is not organi zational but substantive. What does Ronald Reagan want from the Russians, and with the Russians, in his second term? When he addresses that fundamental question, and only then, it will be easy enough to draw the organizational charts and fill in the boxes. What is hard is deciding to do it.

Who Controls the CIA?

"Neutralizing," it develops, means not murder but only removal from office, and "removal" from the CIA of those who counsel murder in Nicaragua means only a reprimand. In plainer English, the administration's creative semantics means stooewalling, to impede a vital inquiry into the means, ends and accountability of the Central Intelligence Agency.

Three important questions were raised by the insurgents' manual that came to light a month ago, How could the CIA let its agents adapt a revolutionary tract that violated the president's directive against political assassination? How could it justify any insurgency wheo the president had vowed that he did not aim to overthrow the Sandinist government? How reliable are the controls over the CIA?

On every count the response has been disturbing. The ageocy was left to examine itself. Summarizing its findings, the White House now insists that the manual although ambiguous here and there, had only "worthy purposes." No matter what gloss is put on words like "neutralize," the primer's unmistakable purpose was to promote the destruction of Nicaragua's leftist regime. Whoever wrote it, and whoever approved it, betrayed the president's word and disobeyed Congress.

In December 1982 Congress condemned the use of 'military equipment, military training or advice, or other support for military activities ... for the purpose of overthrowing the government of Nicaragua. That resolution rective of interdicting the smuggling of arms accomplish in Central America.

— THE NEW YOU

— THE NEW YOU

At the time, Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York, the vice chairman of the ClA oversight committee, voiced fears that the agency was violating both U.S. and inter-national law. His fears were amply borne out last spring when the CIA sponsored the mining of Nicaraguan ports. That in turn moved Congress toward the cutoff of all aid to the "contras" last month. The offendiog manual, then, was distributed last December in defiance of these bipartisan restrictions. It advises rebels to kidnap, blackmail, recruit criminals and selectively "ocutralize" Nicaraguan officials, it eannot be forgiven because the worst pages were ripped out ur, as President Reagan says, because "neutralizing" means, "You just say to the fellow who's sitting there in the office, 'You're not in the office anymore." When the manual surfaced in mid-campaign, the White House promised a detailed inquiry by the CIA's inspector general and said that those responsible would be removed. That inquiry now blames "lapses in judgment" requiring some disciplining of five or six second-echelon officials, but no dismissals. In Senator Moynihan's terse judgment, a few sergeants lost weekend privileges for a mooth,

All this puts a new burden oo Congress. The whole affair speaks volumes about the administration's disdain for law and even for its own avowed policies, fu another time, these became impeachable offenses. For Mr. Reagan to dismiss the controversy about the manual as led to an appropriations amendment clearly much ado about nothing jeopardizes respect confining aid to Nicaraguan rebels to the ob- and bipartisan support for whatever be aims to

A Palestinian Cue to Reagan?

The election of an American president invariably brings forth from the Middle East expressions of bope and warnings of impending doom. Last week was oo exception. More worryingly, it also brought again to the surface some of the discredited myths which for too long have surrounded the Arab-Israel conflict. The greatest of these, perpetuated principally by Arab countries, is that a new or re-elected U.S. president will somehow discover the desire or capacity to impose on Israel what they consider to be a just resolution of the Palestinian issue. It has been assumed that this conversion will occur because of the inherent justice of the Arab cause, not because the Arab countries have adopted policies which make an American change of heart more likely. President Reagan should by now have disabused the Arab countries of that ootion, During his first four years Israel has been brought into closer affiance with the United States, occupied another slice of Arab territory in Lebanoo and established itself yet more emphatically on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, the home of 1.2 million Palestinians, The Arab couptries bave contributed to this disaster by their failure to grasp the opportunities which tend to present themselves in the Middle East to the wake of elimactic events. The Israeli invasioo of southern Lebanon provided just such a momeot by provoking President Reagan into launching his Sept. 1, 1982. peace proposals. Although rejected out of hand by Israel, the proposals did offer a chance for more moderate Arab nations to explore a process which Washingtoo believed could eventually have led to a substantial Israeli withdrawal from the West Bank and wiso to test the sincerity of the American offer by the refusal of Yasser Arafal to risk a definitive split in the ranks of the PLO.

That split will be confirmed if Mr. Arafat goes ahead with a meeting of the Palestine National Council in the face of bitter oppositioo from Syria. The importance of the meeting is that it could open the way to productive cooperation between the moderate wing of the PLO, Jordan and Egypt. If they were jointly to express a conditional willingness to involve themselves in a relaunched Reagan plan, it could provide the signal for the United States to be tempted back ioto the areon. Israel, under its new government, also wants the Americans to become more involved.

Rajiv Gandhi: A Good Start

The impression of indecision that Rajiv Gandhi gave in the first hours after the assassination of Indira Gandhi has been dispelled quickly. Dismissal of high officials in the security services, prosecution of Coogress-I activ-ists accused of abetting Hindu assailants in the recent massacres of Sikhs and compensation arrangements for the victims' families have gone down well, even if this is not enough to restore harmony between the two communi ties. By promptly occupying the great void left by the death of a leader perceived by many Indians as a "mother" and symbol of hope, Rajiv Gandhi has shown calmly and with dignity that the succession could be assumed.

1909: Tourists Are Misers in Church BERLIN - Rich Americans and English, who form a large perceatage of the foreign visitors to Berlin, have given the Rev. J.H. Fry, chaplain of St. George's Church, Montbijoupark, considerable cause for complaint. They are far too niggardly in contributing to the collections at the English Church, "They live in Berlin," he said to his [Nov. 7] sermon, "in the most expensive hotels, and they put bronze and nickel coins in the collection bag which they would be ashamed to offer a waiter. 1934: Did the New Deal Win Heavily? PARIS - According to Henry P. Fletcher, chairmen of the Republican National Committee, the vote for the New Deal io the election of Democratic Representatives, Senators and Governors at the elections Nevember b was approximately 15,000,000, while the vote against the Administration, registered through the election of Republican candidates, was 13,000,000. If these figures conform to the official count then the victory gained by the Administration in winning two-thirds control of both Houses is not an overwhelmiog approval of the President's recovery and relief olicies, it is far from the clear-cut mandate the Democrats claim. Last week's vote shows that the Republican Party is far from dead, as Democrats would have the country believe.

unending internal tug-of-war that resulted. Strobe Talbott's revealing book. "Deadly Gambits," oo the failed U.S.-Soviet missile negotiations recouots in gory detail how the inlighting cootinued even after presidential directives were issued, because they tended to leave vital questions open for interpretation. The book documents a distressing story of non-decision making, almost but not really echoing the judgment of the cartoon charac-ter Pogo that "We bas met the enemy, and it is us." But Mr. Talbott's book is also encouraging, because it makes some conclusions possible about how American leadership can understand and improve its capacity for effective negotiation. It is recommended reading for Mr. Reagan.

The Russian officials will surely have read the book and it should make them wonder about their handling of intricate diplomacy. But it will out give them an advantage. Rather, they are at a disadvan-tage because their lack of free comment deprives them of such a rigorous, objective study of their own procedures and mistakes.

The key antagonists in the U.S. arms control issue were two assistant secretaries, Richard Burt at State and Richard Perle at Defense. Their bu-reaucratic feud reflected, and was made possible by, an underlying conflict over the very notion of arms control. It was never settled. As Mr. Talbott comments at one point, "There was no policy."

Whatever Mr. Reagan's personal inclination now - whether for a peacemaker's role in history or for a Gaullist-like legacy of national intransi-gence — in order to achieve it be needs a team that can agree on a priority and an approach set clearly in his mind, not a Mutt and Jeff act.

The visible strains between the Pentagon and State have been much more complicated than rivalry on two sides of the Potomac and they have covered much more than the arms control issue. It is bard to see how the current cast of players, with shifting alliances to the Joint Chiefs, the arms control agency, the CIA and even Treasury and Commerce on related questions, can ever be brought together in a coherent American purpose.

Nicaragua is another example of befuddlement in the corridors of power. It now appears that the crisis that loomed surprisingly quickly after the

To undermine the Managua government, which has rallied its people, or to push it toward an agreement that Washington now dislikes? Here again there are personal quarrels among senior officials scudding on opposite tacks. If there is a policy it is to accommodate their contradictions, which may calm Washington but does nothing for Central America.

The Middle East, southern Asia, southern Afri-

And the North-South relation has shifted ground, moving from abrasive ideological show-downs to growing understanding of the need for concrete development programs, especially to produce food. This change offers an important area for newly active U.S. policy.

First you have to understand what it was that we thought was the source of the deep division. It was Ronald Reagan's philosophy of government, or anti-government, as expressed in a favorite line of his: "Government is not the solution to our problem. Government is the problem."

ernment is the problem."

V. Lance Tarrance, a Republican poll taker, said in a Jan. 1 Washington Post interview that "in 1980 Reagen launched a real heart-and-soul debate about what government is to do in this country. That debate continued in 1982, and it will reach its climax in 1984. Backers of the liberal doctring will fight with all they have doctrine will fight with all they have to preserve the kind of government they built up before Reagan came in. Conservatives will try to accelerate the change Reagan has started."

What made the choice real for people was that Mr. Reagan had proved that he meant what he said. He cut back the growth of domestic pro-grams substantially in the first year and, in the second, began a concerted drive to spin many of those programs off to state and local governments. The commitment to cut taxes and accelerate the defense buildup made it clear that there would be less of the national budget left for domestic government and the welfare state. ernment and the welfare state.

Mr. Reagan's continuing rhetoric underlined the direction in which he was headed. As recently as July 4, on a trip to Decatur, Alabama, I heard Mr. Reagan say: "I've often had the feeling that if ... we in government ... just slipped out and closed the doors, turned the key and disandoors, turned the key and disap-peared for a while, it would take you s long time to miss us."

But when the campaign began in earnest, that kind of anti-Washington earnest, that kind of anti-Washington rhetoric was toned down. President Reagan became soft on government.

Reagan became soft on government. His favorite sources switched from Calvin Coolidge and Friedrich von Hayek to Franklin D. Roosevelt, the inventor of Big Government, and John F. Kennedy, the exponent of energetic governmental intervention. The mythical Martian coming to Earth might have been confused by what came out of Mr. Reagan's mouth during the Louisville debate with Walter Mondale; "We are today subsidizing housing for more than 10 million people, and we're going to continue along that line... I will never stand for a reduction of the Social Security benefits."

Social Security benefits."

Mr. Mondale helped blunt the edge of the "sharp choice" election by offering his tax-increase proposal not as a straightforward necessity for financing the welfare state but for the traditionally conservative purpose of the federal deficit. Ever then. Mr. Reagan used it to whip middle-class voters back in line. They were, as always, the swing voters, and Mr. Reagan won their support by increasing margins as the year progressed. Last December, when the Washington Post-ABC News Poll had the Reagan-Mondale race a 48-45 percent toss-up, the $20,000 a year income mark was the dividing line between Republican and Democratic families. Above that line Mr. Reagan led, 58 to 37 percent. Below it Mr. Mondale was in front.

But by this fall the dividing line ad moved down to the $10,000-to-$12,000 income level, and any pros-pect of a Mondale majority had dis-appeared. Middle-class voters, those clustered around the $20,000 mark gave Mr. Reagan the margin of support by which he carried the country. "Ideological" elements did not disappear entirely, of course. Self-described conservatives gave Mr. Reagan 81 percent of their votes in the gan 81 percent of their voices in the ABC exit poll, up substantially from 1980, while only 25 percent of self-described liberals said they support-ed him, about the same as four years before and a percentage that some liberals will find astonishing.

That may suggest that conserva-tives paid attention to Mr. Reagan's actions while liberals were hilled by his words. But in post-election comments many conservative activists blamed the White House staff for bhirring the message, asserting that Mr. Reagan's blandness may have boosted his own margins but failed to energize the electorate to support Re-publicans in congressional elections. Whether that is true we will never know. But the "ideological election many of us expected did not occur.

The Help for America's Poor Hasn't Been Enough and tried to speak, but ber voice was ment to the Los Angeles Times.

WASHINGTON - Most Americans believe they have dooe their bit for society's losers, who no longer need belp. This is certainly understandable. During the last generation extraordinary efforts were made to ereate opportunities and a new safety net for the poor, and particularly blacks, but it is hard to claim that these efforts were successful.

Despite billions of dellars spent and sweeping new laws and Supreme Court decisions creating new opportunities, the number of society's losers has declined by only about a fourth in the last quarter century and has rised in the last decade. Poverty was nearly halved between 1960 and 1975; it held steady until 1979 and has risen sharply since - whether or not the value of "noocash benefits" to the poor is considered. America has failed to break the culture of poverty, and for some paris of the population, notably for many blacks. conditions have become worse.

This is a shocking record. A decade ago many specialists were convinced that they would see the national economy do oot affect litical movement, and until it is all groups proportionally. Second, demographic chaoges, particularly the increase in the oumber of households beaded by women, have increased poverty regardless of the economy's performance. (Nearly half the officially poor Americans live in families beaded by women; 35.7 percent of all families headed by women live in poverty.) Mr. Gottschalk predicts that the poverty rate will fall by perhaps one percentage point when the 1984 figures are released, and maybe half a point more if there are two more years of economic growth. So a four-year Reagan boom will only bring the poverty rate back to its 1980 level. This suggests an indefinite prolongation of economie bardship for more than 50 millioo American citizens. The suffering of a substantial minority of Americans remains a permanent, if generally unmentioned, feature of the American dream. Some conservatives have acknowledged the oeed to reach out to the poor and the blacks to validate the conservative vision of a better America for all its citizeas. Representative Jack Kemp, the New York Republi-

The movements of Americans from the conservative pocrossed conservatives cannot make o full claim to national leadership." But such voices do cot dominate the conservative movement or the Reagan administration. Senator Jesse Helms ran successfully for re-election in North Carolina with a blatantly racist appeal to white voters. President Reagan himself took some giant steps backward in race relations during the campaign, denouncing school busing io ooe community (Charlotte, North Carolina) where it has demonstrably worked, to the pride of the local community, and telling an audience in Macon, Georgia, that "the South will rise again!" - a rallying cry of segregationists in an earlier era.

This has been a bad year for blacks. Their candidates fared poorly, and they saw an alarming revival of race politics in the South. They rallied around Jesse Jackson's candidacy, only to be told - by white politicians and by poll results — that he gravely burt the Democratic cause. Mr. Jackson raised black hopes and the electorate dashed them. Of America's 28 million blacks, 35.7 percent live in poverty. Of black families headed by women, 56.1 percent are officially poor. Of the nation's black children, 46.3 percent cearly half - are in poverty.

What are Americans going to do about this appalling situation? Eocourage more growth, period. That, at least, is the increasingly fashionable answer — even if growth alone is insufficient to solve this problem. Bleeding hearts have gone out of style. Who said life was fair? A national preoccupation with money and wealth is as old as the republic. Social critics may denounce present greed and selfishness, yet in truth history is full of both.

But there is more than that in the past. In his great acceptance speech at the 1952 Democratic convention, Adlai Stevenson listed "materialism" among the country's ills. That, and not the Jerry Falwell version, is the Christian strain that is strongest in American history. We may be greedy and selfish, but periodically we deal nobly and generously with our less fortunate countrymen. You have to wonder when that spirit will return. Just now it seems overdue. The incidents — and the extensive publicity they received — have caused an uproor in the church. Bishop James W. Malone, head of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, issued a statement three weeks before the election, declaring, "We do not seek the formation of a voting bloc. . . The content of Catholic teaching leads us to take positions on many public issues; we are not a one-issue church."

Bishop Malone said the bishops "give special emphasis to two issues today. They are the prevention of nuclear war and the protection of unborn human life."

Concerned that the statements by Archhishop O'Connor and Archbishop Law had "con-fused" Catholics into thinking they should vote on the basis of a politician's stance on abortion alone, 23 bishops, led by Auxiliary Bishop Thomas J. "The seamless garment seems to protect a lot of liberals who get two out of three," said Mr. Hyde, a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. "They're for the liberal welfare agenda, they're against our defense policies, but they never vote with us on abortion."

The new economic letter draws on the social encyclicals of Popes John X'XIII, Paul VI and John Paul II. Indeed, in a visit to Canada last month, John Paul II decried "imperialistic monopolies" and called for a restructuring of the economy "so that humar, needs can be put before financial gain."

Tale of a Jewish Grandfather Makes a Good Play

By Sheridan Morley tional Herald Tribune

TONDON — Io a crumbling ani-L mal-infested czarist railway carriage at the back of the Moscow Railway shunting yards sometime in 1924, a Jewish inventor of considerable and starry eccentricity is about to perfect the talking picture about five years ahead of the Warner brothers. The idea itself has a certain fascination, leading as it presumably would have to a mu-sical remake of "Potemkin," not to mention an all-Soviet "Jazz Sing-

But Stephen Poliakoff's oew play, "Breaking the Silence" (in a marvelous Royal Shakespeare Company production by Ron Dan-iels at the Barbican Pit), is oot another trip down the might-havea jazz band serves as a model for society. He says his main object is, grandfather who, because of a little death and its effect on railway employment prospects, had to flee in his socks across the border without his invention. In the end the Poliakoffs didn't Stockholm with Zoot Sims, Nov. 19 do too badly: The soo took to inat the Castle Hotel and Nov. 23 at venting hospital beepers and the grandsoo to being one of the best kettle can invent talking pictures, playwrights of his generation. But and still odder that in Act 2 the Mosebacke, and in New York at the grandsoo to being one of the best it is oever quite clear why the grandfather had this terrible vision of himself as a mad old man trying to coovince people that he was the true inventor of cinematie sound instead of pressing on to California like so many of his fellow exiles and

Partly that is because the play-wright has oo interest in his family About 350,000 people can sit down once they reach Britain and partly for each show and we expect a total it is because he doesn't have much of 1.5 to 2 million entries for the 10 interest in cinematic sound.

The silence that is being broken Ornstein said Artplan is spend-here is oot really that of the cinema ing $10 to $11 millioo oo the festi- at all. It is the silence of the inventor's wife who, io his hour of oced at the border, at last finds her voice and saves his life. To that extent, it is a play about female liberation and the shift in family power structures that came with Communism.

Passion is a good idea gone away. Set io York during the summer of 1392, it concerns the arrival there of King Richard II while the city is It's also a play about a son io revolt against his father, but so mesmeric is Daniel Massey as the manic inventor that in the end we really can only care about him - and wonder how long it will be before one of the best and most underrated actors of his generation gets to play Diaghi-ley, for which this performance would seem to be a last rehearsal.

THE BRITISH STAGE

Admittedly, Poliakoff has written a better part than a play: A man of wealth and influence suddenly turned into a minor Soviet bureaucrat ("I am not the right person to watch telephone poles being erect-ed") is a funny idea. If you add to grandfather who, because of a little that the touching ootion of a man local difficulty involving Lenin's already removed from reality oow condemned to live in a railway carriage that may take off at any moment for Siberia or worse, you end up with an epic study in human

It may seem odd that a man who has oever yet managed to boil a play lurches into a Soviet re-run of "Pygmalion," with Massey trying to enlist the aid of his maid (Juliet Stevensoo) in a cultural project unlikely to do her much good.

Jason Lake is touching as the gawky rebel son, and Gemma Jones wooderfully manages the transition from aristocratic wife to freedom organizer, but this remains Massey's evening, and not for the first time, he is giving one of the fioest performances in the history of the RSC.

in the midst of preparations for the already traditional Passion play. Like the crucifixion at Oberammergau, or the Palio at Siena, this tends to overwhelm the entire city, and involves rival guilds in huge outlays of expense and energy as they stage something halfway between a pag-eant and a festival. If you then bring on the king and his train (largely consisting of two queens, his wife and his boyfriend) the scene should be set for some enjoyable chaos. Amateur theatricals have, as Alan Ayckbourn established in "10 Times Table," always been good for a few unkind laughs, and the life of Richard II, as Shake-speare established in a play of that utle, was seldom uninteresting.

Yet in taking on the two, Minghella has somewhow delivered oeither. We don't get to learn much about Richard beyond his inven-tion of the handkerchief, and we get an only a sketchy idea of what it was like to be a citizeo of York in the Passioo season.

Bishoprie jokes about London being in York with Oxford have been better done elsewhere (oota-"Beyond the Fringe") and backstage gags about the running time and a fat leading man seem somehow misplaced when that leading man is having to play Christ on the cross. Cathryn Harrison as Anne of Bohemia, forever condemned to tour England in search of a decent bed and a rather too gay husband, hits just the right air of martyrdom.

Uoder its oew quartet of joint directors (Braham Murray, Greg Hersov, James Maxwell and Cas-Out at Greeowich, Aotooy per Wrede), the Manchester Royal Minghella's Two Planks and a Exchange has a new stage adaptaooo of "Great Expectations which manages to be simultaneous efficient and oddly aimless Spoiled perhaps by the recent ainchour sprawl of the RSC's "Nicholas Nickleby," we come to "Great Expectations" expecting more than just a competent editing job and a quick canter through the highlights of the narrative.

Io abandoning traditional Dickensiana (no fog. no streets, no ex-tracts from other plays that the characters visit or perform), the Manchester Company has also abandoned much in the way of style or atmosphere, and we are left with a kind of workshop staging in the round, which seems to have no coherent style or attitude to the original book.

Avril Elgar is, however, an unusually sprightly Miss Havisham, cropping up all over the stage and even descending from the roof to stage-manage the proceedings, and Amanda Donohoe is a gorgeous.

And finally, the Ritz Hotel, which under the elegant new management of Julian Payne is fast becoming one of the best cabaret spots in town, has until the end of this mooth (on Wednesdays and Fridays only) Liz Robertson doing an intriguing songbook of minor American classics.

Although the selection is not as Broadway-oriented as might have been expected from Mrs. Alan Jay Lerner, she does do the title song from her husband's "Dance a Little Closer," still shamefully unknown over here, and then moves; on through echoes of Sondheim to the work of Carly Simon and Gretchen Cryer, American women who write one-act plays disguised as songs. It adds up to an hour of rare lytical

ANTA CRUZ, California — Jack Conrad knew he was in for trouble when the pickup truck began heading his way.

Mr. Conrad, a 29-year-old drifter from Illinois, backed up defensively. But the truck kept moving slowly forward, cornering the bearded transient against a chain-link fence. Two teen-agers jumped from the truck's cab and pounced on him. "Off the streets, troll," they shouted as they beat him up.
"They were just young kids full of the dickens," Mr. Conrad said last week. "I try to forget about it; then somebody talks about it

The attack on Mr. Conrad oo Sept. 6 is one in a rash of recent assaults on transients in this northern California coastal community long considered a mecca for the countercul ture. The transients have been dubbed "trolls" because they often take refuge under and it all just comes right back."

Violence against the homeless is disturbing in any city, but in Santa Cruz, where back-packs and Birkenstock sandals seem to be standard issue and rainbow window stickers adorn Volkswagen vans, the often brutal assaults seem incongruous.

Nonetheless, the attacks apparently have struck a chord in this resort and university city of 42,000 tucked between Monterey Bay and the redwood-studded hills of the Coastal Range. Io September, a downtown clothing store, playing off the success of the movie "Ghostbusters," began printing "Troll Busters" T-shirts with a caricature of a drooling degenerate covered by a red circle and slash. In less than three weeks, the store owner, Ron Trinchero, sold oearly 3,000 of the shirts.

"They sold an awful amount of those shirts," said Peter Carota, director of a local soup kitchen that feeds scores of transients daily. "It means there's other people oot in the community with the same strong sentiment against street people. It's almost like it's open warfare oow, like it's OK to come out and treat transients like subhumans. It's like bunting season is open."

THERS also point to the shirt sales as a sign that many Santa Cruz residents are fed up with the vagrants, who live in the hills outside town and jam the city's parks and seven-block downtown mall, an open-air stretch of trendy shops, red-tiled walkways and verdant gardens.

"I think the shirts were people's way of making a statement," Mr. Trinchero said. "They're saying they don't like these tran-

During a two-month period beginning in late July, 19 transients were assaulted, ac-cording to police. Law enforcement officials fear that many more incidents have not been reported by vagrants worried about being jailed for past run-ins with the law.

With the rainy season setting in, the oumber of attacks has dwindled in recent weeks, but police fear a renewal of violence. "I've been here 17 years and I've oever seen anything like this," said Sergeant Bill Aluffi, who has investigated the attacks. "I have no doubt this violence may rear up again." Police Chief Jack Bassett, bowever, played down the attacks.

"The street people are always a major irritant to the people of this city," he said.
"We're a small geographic area. You put 100 to 200 hippies in it and you create a problem.
Every time a person turns around, they're bumping into it."

olice have made no arrests. They believe the attacks have been carried out by groups of teen-agers or young adults.

"We've either got a bunch of kids driving over from San Jose on a weekend lark or we've got people living right here in the are doing it," Sergeant Aluffi said. "In either case, it's kids lonking for excitement."

"The air of violence bere in Santa Cruz is intense," said Keith McKinney, a 35-year-old drifter. "People aren't acting rationally. They're getting weapons. They don't want to have some kid strum their head."

"We're thinking of forming a troll-busters patrol," added a transient who calls himself Dancing Stick. "The basic plan is to set the troll busters up. We'd bait them by having a guy in a sleeping bag or out on the street. When they went for him, we'd come and use their own medicine against them."

It is that kind of talk that has pobce worried. "I don't like what it could bring." Ser-geant Aluffi said. "Some of the transients tripping around here are combat veterans. They've taken their lumps this far. A few more lumps to get even with the kids that are doing this wouldn't surprise me."

David Tokor, a transient who says he camps each night with two shotguns, said: What this all is progressing into is an outsients. They cootribute nothing to the com-munity. They're freeloaders." standing little war. People are really ready to burt anyone that messes with them."

There are many explanations for the attacks. Mike Rotkin, a lecturer in community studies at the University of California, Santa Cruz, and one of two Socialists elected to the City Council in 1980, contends that the "troll busting" is a sign of the times.

"It's this notion that we've got to stand up and make America strong, the whole Reagan ideology," Mr. Rotkin said. "Adults are saying that something has to be done about the transients, that they've got to be driven out of town. That creates a sort of moral backing for young punks to go out and start bashing people." Councilwoman Katy Sears-Williams explains the attacks in Darwinian terms.

"We are members of the animal kingdom and it's a reasonable reaccoo for society to want to rid itself of something that it sees as a real problem, as a real threat," she said. "I think the troll busting is a social reaction that we ought to expect. To expect people to say, 'Hey, this is OK,' and keep putting up with these transients would be very unusual."

Residents and city officials seem to agree on one thing: Transients pose problems for city merchants. Shop owners say the vagrants routinely harass women, urinate in planter boxes or on store fronts, eat out of garbage cans, panhandle and generally burt sales.

"They have a right to live, but they don't have a right to mess up the froot of my shop," said Sylvia Mason, who runs a clothing store on the downtown mail.

Drugs also have been a problem. Earlier this month, a police narcotics unit raided a city park and arrested 10 persons, including five transients.

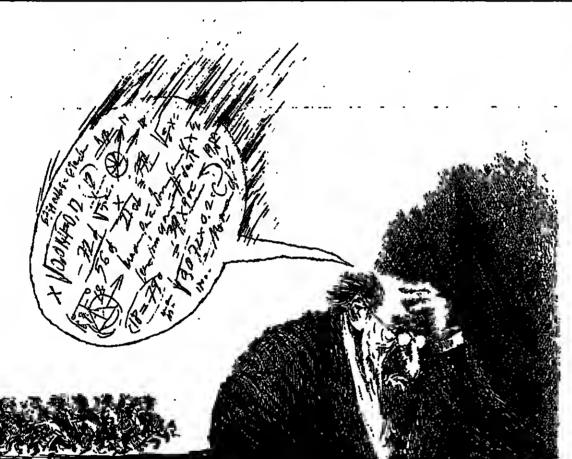

Prompted by merchants' complaints, the City Conneil voted in September to join the university in funding an $11,000 study of the transient problem.

The recent wave of assaults began in De-cember 1983, when three local high school students seriously wounded a San Jose taxi driver in an attack with a bomemade bazooka. The teen-agers later told police they "were out buoting trolls," whom they described as "long-haired hippies, Commies and trantransient suffered a broken leg evading a truck. A week later, a gang of youths armed with sticks attacked a 19-year-old vagrant from Nebraska while he was in his sleeping bag on a downtown knoll. After beating the man, the group threw him off a 15-foot (4.5meter cliff. The man suffered bruises and

Tattered Angola Appears Ready To Take Gambles for Self-Respect

By Jim Hoagland

UANDA, Angola — It has been nine years since the white settlers who styled this city as Africa's Lisbon abruptly left, abandoning it to revolutionaries who vowed that Luanda would, as the tide of history turned in this proper Africa's Hancier in this region, become Africa's Hanoi.

Today, such dreams lie broken in the desolate streets of Luanda, a city gripped by a continuing agony that contradicts the ideological victory that revolutionaries and liberals hoped for and that conservatives around the world feared.

Instead of being a springboard for revolutionary challenge to white rule in South Africa and pro-Western African regimes on its border, Angola is a nation ravaged by chaos and international intervention.

Mounds of rotting garbage drape the mile-long curb of the bayside promenade that the Portuguese lined with mosaic tile and called the Marginale. Shops and businesses throughout this city of a million people are abendoned, their broken plate-glass windows replaced by boards or simply not replaced at all. At one pharmacy, a single hottle of shampoo sits amid empty shelves, a reminder of the collapse of the consumer ecocomy bere.

On an evening cooled by breezes off the Atlantic, trash fires glow along a street that formerly was a principal business artery. Beside a rusted car, a woman and two small children quickly pick through a garbage heap, burrying to beat the curiew that will begin in a few hours.

Angola today is a severely wounded country struggling to recover, a place where there is nothing to buy and for most people no money to buy it with, a place where jobs and work are therefore largely meaningless and absentecism the rule. That is what foreign residents repeatedly tell a visitor returning for the first time since colonial rule collapsed in retreat in 1975.

It is, on the surface, as chaotic as the Portuguese administrators and their white American and South African supporters predicted it would be if colonialism was to end and Africans were allowed to rule themselves.

And on the surface, the consequences of letting the final variant of the Nixon Doctrine go down to defeat in Angola appear to be as dire as Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger predicted at the time. Cuban soldiers in trucks and East German security personnel in jeeps bounce through Luanda's dusty streets regularly.

But Angola today is a far more complex historical phenomenon than those simplistic projections had foreseen. Beneath the visible signs of disaster a new spirit of political pragmatism is stirring as the nominally Marxist-Leninist government reacts to the enormous problems it has helped create and others of which it has been the victim.

"The Angolan story is hardly finished, whatever the strategists in Moscow or Washington think and bowever they may try to impose their designs on reality here," said a diplomatic ob-server. "The local reality is that Angola is faced with an enormous gamble that will determine not only this government's survival, but also a lot about the future of the conflict between African nationalism and white rule in this region. The difference now is that the government is becoming confident enough to contemplate now taking the gamble."

"You are going to Angola?" the worldly, upper-class Portuguese matron in Lishon asked, a look of horror on her face. "But there is nothing to eat there. There is no water. The Cubans run it." Her dismay deepened as she thought about the prospect and she quickly broke off the conversation.

Her warnings, repeated by journalistic col-leagues and others in Lisbon, turned out to be currency to pay for it at Luanda's only comfortable hotel. The hotel, the Presidente, has been open for business only a few months and is now filled with airline crews, returning Portuguese technicians and Western oil executives seeking to get in on new economic opportunities here. But there are oo taxis in this town, leaving a visitor to rely on his feet and on the kindness of strangers - anyone with wheels. The only form of public transportation is a small oumber of buses that reel as hundreds of Angolans pile into

The colonialists here who said white rule would survive and create a thriving, fair society fled in an instant and left behind them a system so fragile and bankrupt it collapsed overnight.

The African nations that supported the guerrillas and said independence would right the most elementary wrongs of this society have seen instead a continuing war that is as much tribal as it is political. And the Soviets and Americans who sought to ture it into an ideological battle-ground now watch the Angolans try to edge crown. Wealth was beginning to pour in from oil, coffee, diamonds and agricultural exports. The beginning of serious revolutionary activity had jolted the Portuguese out of 500 years of complacency and exploitation. They were beginning to examine ways of extending privilege beyond the small circle of mixed-race and black Angilans they had accepted into the system.

That change had barely begun when radical young Portuguese army officers, weary of colonial warfare, overthrew Lisbon's dictatorship and offered to turn power over to African nationalists in Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique and Angola. Here, the African nationalist movement was fractured along ideological and tribal lines that quickly drew both superpowers and oeighboring South Africa into the struggle for cootrol of Angola.

The outside involvement escalated the conflict. It also belped frighten the Lisbon government and the more than 300,000 white settlers. who had formed the economic and political infrastructure of this country of seven million inhabitants, into pulling out of Angola and rushing home.

The exodus would itself have been sufficient to ensure that the prophecies of collapse and chaos would come true. Left behind in ruins was to use the year instead of months as a measure of time. > dos Santos contemplates reports of such drastic conditions without betraying a hint of despair or disappointment. The 42-year-old president of Angola exudes the determination that has always marked his style, and a confidence that foreigners who watch him closely say is new. Trained as a petroleum engineer in the Soviet Union, Mr. dos Santos has tried cautiously but systematically in his five years to consobdate power in the faction-ridden party that rules Angola. He appears to have applied engineering principles to politics and to have succeeded in a step-by-step isolation of potential rivals within the Popular Movement.

Earlier this year, Mr. dos Santos stopped TITLE more than a decade ago, Angola seemed to have become the jewel in the badly tarnished Portuguese colonial grown. Wealth was beginning to come to complete the process of the country of the country

The party reportedly has about 30,000 members, and can count oo the support of the 120,000 members of the oational trade union

One of Mr. dos Santos' allies on the Defense and Security Council is Lopo do Nascimento, the planning minister, who acknowledged that the party made enormous economic mistakes after independence, and who said the present regime must improve things by decentralizing and emphasizing efficiency, particularly in agri-

He described the state marketing board set up to handle coffee sales as "a monster" and said: "We cannot solve our problems without the belp of our farmers."

On a Sunday, the "internationalists," as the foreigners who live and work in Angola are known, gather in knots along the beaches that curve in an arc around The Island, Luanda's once-fashionable resort area across the bay.

INNISH relief workers, Cuban officers mixing easily with Angolan counterparts, French oil company employees and Soviet air traffic controllers retreat from the tensions of the work week to The Island. Up the beach, bowever, one group has not left the cares of the "real world" behind. Dressed in bright blue exercise suits, about 20 East German technicians, believed to work for the department of state security, move about their separate beach progress and hope.

(16 kilometers) south of Luanda, José Eduardo ble has made Angola the centerpiece of current U.S. policy m Africa.

In addition to the combat units deployed in defense positions along the Lubango rail line, a dozen or so Cuban advisers are thought to be stationed with each of the Angolan Army's battalions and to have been instrumental in organizing and training those battalions, according to reliable witnesses.

UT these witnesses also reported that Angola is beginning to take over more of the training of its rapidly expanding army, which is thought to number about 65,000. And a trip with the Angolan Air Force to the war zone of the south confirmed that fully trained Angolan pilots are taking over more of the flying missions, although Cuban helicopter pilots remain an important part of anti-guerrilla.

There is a confidence in the army that was not there before," said a trained observer, "It is the reason the government can pursue the diplomatic option with the United States as deeply as it has, and to propose to the South Africans that the Cubans will go if the South Africans will get out of the picture and cut off supplies to Mr. Savimbi's guerrillas.

"Dos Santos has to know that Savimbi has stockpiled two or three years worth of supplies in the forests out there, and that it will be a hard fight for them in a one-against-one struggle," the observer said. "But it is a gamble that the Luanda government looks like it may be ready

Despite everything, the Portuguese are still the foreigners who matter bere. And it is more than the fact that Portuguese is the national language that permits Angola's bundreds of linguistically different tribes to converse with each other. There are suggestions of other kinds that there is an acceptance of Portuguese culture here that goes deeper than colonial heritage in other parts of Africa.

For the poorest residents of this demoralized city, there are two classes of people. They either live "on the asphalt," and therefore are well to do, or "on the sand," in the shantytowns that have mushroomed across the sandy outskirts of the city since independence.

On a recent Sunday at The Island, 30,000 Angolans turned out for the first national party beld since independence. Sponsored by the local radio station and a few of the surviving businesses, it offered unusual plenitude. Rival bands played pop songs, children danced beneath paim trees, a few drunks roamed the crowd and enormous quantities of beer were consumed.

Analysts said investors were concerned about the size of the federal budget deficit and pressures on corporate profits.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which gained 0.22 Monday, fell 12.59 to 1,206.60. Since hitting its highest level in 10 months last Tuesday, the day of the election, the Dow has lost 37.55 points. Every session has ended either lower or with indecisive results.

Declines outpumbered advances by a ratio of Declines outnumbered advances by a ratio of 2 to 1. Volume totaled 69.8 million shares, up from the 55.6 million traded Monday.

Monte Gordon of Drefyus Co. said where formerly the stock market went up when interest rates went down, there has been a "shift in emphasis to the more difficult environment for corporate earnings." He said investors are con-cerned that the low-inflation, slow-growth economy will increase competitive pressures and squeeze profit margins.

Mr. Gordon also cited concerns that the federal budget deficit may get larger due to declining tax revenues. There is no indication the administration has any plan to deal with the problem," he said.

"With the volume anemic, it doesn't look like there is any heavy selling pressure on the down-side," said John Brooks of Shearson-Robinson Humphrey, Atlanta.

"There is not enough positive pressure to bring anybody off the sidelines," Mr. Brooks said, noting that many retail customers appear to have ample funds.

INTERNATIONAL MANAGER

Marketing Game Becomes Management-Training Tool

By SHERRY BUCHANAN International Herald Tribuni

ARIS — Marketing managers are sharpening their teeth with a high-tech marketing strategy game called MARK-STRAT. The brainchild of Jean-Claude Larreche, professor of marketing at INSEAD (Institut Européen d'Administration des Affaires), and Hubert Gatignon, assistant professor of marketing at the University of Pennsylvania, this simulation exercise has been used by business schools in the United States and Europe since the late '70s.

Recently redesigned for microcomputer use, and therefore easier to use, MARKSTRAT has now become a managementarining tool for several companies anxious to position their products more effectively and products more effectively and more aggressively. Users in-clude Digital Equipment, Eu-rope, a subsidiary of Digital Equipment Co. of the United States; Ciba-Geigy SA, the Swiss chemical company; Nestlé SA, the Swiss foodprocessing company: Reckitt & Colman PLC, the British over five harrowing, 14-hour days and the penalties are tough.

The game is played food and home-care-products company, and General Electric Co. of the United States.

"What people are finding is that competitors are no longer passive or reactive, they are getting anticipatory," said Mark Spelman, one of the seminar leaders and managing director of STRAT*X, the small French consulting concern set up to market MARKSTRAT and that specializes in strategic-management software and services. "Very often you could be all right if your competitors were passive or reactive Rut it's a different ball same competitors were passive or reactive. But it's a different ball game once they start anticipating each others' moves," he added he cost of a weekly seminar can reach $30,000, depending on the number of managers involved. At present, MARKSTRAT can only be "played" in seminars, but STRAT X is developing software that would enable managers to play the game on their own personal computers. But this is no simpleton's video game. MARKSTRAT is a complex and sophisticated strategic simulation exercise played over five harrowing, 14-hour days in which five teams each representing a company are pitted against each other.

The MARKSTRAT world is tough. Each company is given two brands to position in the market during an eight-year period. Among the many options available to them, teams can buy consumer market-research studies, spend on R&D to try to improve their product, invest in a new product, or advertise.

But there are no easy choices. Nor are there simple correlations in which, for instance, sales automatically rise when prices are cut. In the game, companies face budgetary constraints: It costs valuable time to get more money from headquarters. Your R&D department may refuse to develop the product you've asked for because it's unrealistic or too expensive. You have the option of burning the old product or selling it to a developing country. You are not going to be able to reposition your product — appeal to a wider segment of the market or to a different group of consumers -only through advertising because consumers will have already perceived the product in a certain way.

"If you try to reposition a Rolls-Royce, you're going to find it very hard to do anything significant with advertising," said Mr. Spelman. The car, he maintains, will always have a certain image with the public.

The companies face strong consumer unions. "Ralph Nader and his gang have been working very hard in the MARKSTRAT world." said Mr. Spelman. Mr. Nader is a U.S. consumer advocate. The companies also face bothersome governments that can impose price controls or come down on a team for breaking antitrust regulations.

Common mistakes by teams include going beserk at the beginning of the game and overspending, drastically cutting prices to try to gain market share or misreading the consumer and not repositioning their products properly. The penalty is fierce: The companies may go bust and they often do. But, in the MARK-STRAT world, the government will bail you out with loans. You can also play the game over and over again because there is no set formula to win. How your company does depends on the marketing strategies of the other four.

Profits Narrow In U.S.

Quarterly Result Shows Sales Drop

By David A. Vise

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — The growth of corporate profits slowed in the United States during third quarter as consumer demand flattened and imports surged, economists say.

Corporate profits in the third quarter were 9 percent ahead of the quarter last year, following year-to-year gains of 45 percent and 28 percent in the first and second quarters, according to a survey of 900 large corporations by Business

Sales in the quarter, about $700 billion, fell compared with the previous quarter for the first time in almost two years.

But economists did not find the news completely dismaying. The modest inflation rate means the quality of earnings in the quarter was good and that corporate cash flow remained strong. However, experts said that one factor that hurt profits was the inability of many corporations to pass along increased costs to con-sumers in the form of higher prices. This, they said, may continue to slow profit growth.

Many corporations were forced to discount merchandise to remain competitive, and as they cut prices more rapidly than they could reduce costs, profits were squeezed.

A surge in imports during the quarter, largely attributable to the strength of the dollar on foreignexchange markets, continued to threaten several basic industries, economists said. Economists said the brisk level of economic activity during the second half of 1983 made year-to-year profit increases more difficult for corporations, especially as the overall pace of the economic recovery moderates. Most economists expect small gains in profits to continue in this quarter and in 1985. "The industries hardest hit by the increased competition from imports are the ones I worry about most, like steel, textiles, apparel, machinery and automobiles if the Japanese restraint on imports are significantly reduced," said Roger E. Brinner, chief economist at Data

Intelsat's Lonely Orbit Threatened By Space-Invading Competitors

By Reginald Stuart
New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — On a hillside facing Connecticot Avenue a few miles from the White House, construction workers are huilding one of the most visually striking projects on the city's changing skyline. It is a $50-million headquarters for Intelsat, the organization of 108 governments that runs the only worldwide satellite communica-

The Intelsat project, an assemblage of 10 four-and five-story buildings of glass and steel woven together with cylinder-shaped glass stairwells, makes an optimistic architectural statement about technology and the future. But just as construction is approaching completion, Intelsat is facing financial uncertainties.

The same rapid advances of technology that combined with a trend toward deregulation to hasten the hreakup of the Bell System, threaten to end Intelsat's 20-year near-monopoly on international satellite communications.

The organization, through a globe-encircling network of satellites and ground stations, carries 60 percent of all international telephone calls and nearly all intercontinental television transmissions. But now, four U.S.-based companies want to launch satellites to compete with Intelsat for trans-Atlantic husiness, the busiest segment of Intelsat's network. Two others want to carry traffic between North and South America.

Moreover, by 1988, Intelsat will face competition from a trans-Atlantic fiber-optic cable that will offer high-volume, low-cost telephone, data and video transmissions.

The Federal Communications Commission bad delayed action on the applications from the private satellite companies pending a White House policy statement on direct competition with Intelsat. Now that the presidential election has returned Ronald Reagan for a second term, industry experts expect an affirmative answer. Mark S. Fowler, the FCC chairman, has indicated that he favors such competition.

Intelsat, however, argues that it would have to raise rates to offset loss of traffic and that the pain would be greatest for poor countries.

"Intelsat is marching the poor in front of them so they can sustain an unsustainable monopoly in face of this American process," said Thomas K. McKnight, president of Orion Satellite Corp., one of the six would-be competitors. "There is never any merit for monopoly, particularly one that is controlled by foreigners. It only invites mischief,"

Citing the existence of regional government-run systems and proposals in Europe for private ven-tures, the Americans say the Intelsat monopoly already is a thing of the past. They say they are just trying to get into the game ahead of private satel-lite companies from other nations.

life companies from other nations.

Mr. McKnight said that his company and others were not trying to run intelsat ont of business but that there was plenty for everyone. "We just feel there are business customers who want alternatives and deserve them," be said.

This all comes as Intelsat is bracing itself for the competitive squeeze expected in mid-1988 when the eighth trans-Atlantic seabed cable between North America and Europe begins operating, vast-ly expanding communications opportunities between the two continents.

The North Atlantic market currently accounts for 40 percent of Intelsar's traffic, or $180 million of projected 1984 revenues of $450 million.

TAT-8, as the proposed project is known, will be the first trans-Atlantic fiber-optic cable. It will be able to handle 37,000 voice, video and data transmissions simultaneously, four times more than the TAT-7 cable, which went into service in July 1983. The cable project is backed by a group of 29

Unilever Profit Increased 25% In 3d Quarter

By Lynne Curry International Herald Tribune

LONDON - Unilever PLC and NV, the British-Dutch maker of detergents, foods and personal products, reported Tuesday that net rose 25 percent to £133 million ($167.5 million) from £106 million a year earlier.

Sales during the period, which ended Sept. 30, increased 10 percent to £3.7 hillion from £3.37 hil-

Pretax profit in the quarter rose 8 percent to £233 million from £215 million a year earlier.

Nine-month net rose 21 percent to £359 million from £296 million in the corresponding period last year, on sales up 12 percent at £11.03 billion from £9.88 billion. On a pretax basis, nine-month profit rose 13 percent to £674 mil-ion from £596 million. The results were slightly below market expectations. Shares of Un-ilever PLC, the British arm, closed on the London Stock Exchange at 10.60 pence a share, down 20 pence from Monday. Shares of Unilever NV, the Dutch arm, closed at 305

guilders on the Amsterdam Stock

Exchange, up slightly from the opening price of 304 guilders.
Unilever said its profits in North America declined because of new product investment in its subsidiary. Lever Brothers, and difficult conditions in the tea market. The profits of another subsidiary. National Starch, also lost mo-mentum as the recovery of the U.S. economy slowed, according to Daid Lang, an analyst Henderson Crosthwaite & Co., a London stockbrokerage.

In Europe, the company posted lower results in edible fat and ice cream operations. Analysis said bad weather affected ice cream sales, while the downturn in edible oil and margarine was sharper than expected because of competition.

Unilever said its animal-feed companies had been adversely affeeted by European Community measures to reduce milk produc

Analysts noted that detergent sales were generally flat and faced a tough time in Britain and West Germany, although there was improvement in Italy and France.

Fannie Mae to Try to Raise $2 Billion a Year in Europe

Mr. Maxwell also said he was optimistic that the U.S. Treasury would relax the regulations covering these sales to attract more individual huyers of the paper.

Speaking at a press conference, Mr. Maxwell said the absence of participation among individual investors in the sale was disappointing, but that institutional interest was good.

He said individuals are still besitant about the way these issues are targeted for foreign investors. The Fannie Mae issue, like that of the U.S. Treasury a few weeks earlier. was sold in a specially registered form that requires documentation that the owner is not a U.S. citizen

STRONG MEDICINE

By Arthur Hailey. 448 pp. $16.95 Doubleday, 245 Park Ave., New York, N.Y. 10167.

Reviewed by Sandy Rovner

ARTHUR HAILEY's "Strong Medicine" is A the putative inside story of the pharmaceutical industry. "revealing," proclaims its advance publicity, "the machinations of a business where millions of dollars and millions of lives hang on every decision."

Unabashedly, Hailey tells us in his preface that the book's heroine is at least reminiscent of his wife, which makes it perhaps a bit outre 10 suggest that the protagonist of "Strong Medicine," Celia Jordan, may be a little too good to be true. She is attractive, of course—what Hailey heroine isn'i?—but also brilliant, intuitive, innovative, sensitive, loyal, feminine and witty. She is conscious to the point of ennui of her singularity as a loophole lady in an all-male domain. But she is, Hailey is quick to tell us, no feminist.

Celia Jordan is worshiped and adored by most everyone in the novel, except the "bad guys," who are instantly identifiable by their perverted response to her charms. But to those gentle readers who meet her along the way, she is a crashing bore.

Nothing that goes wrong with the drug com-pany she eventually heads is ever her fault —or the fault of the system. It is paragon Celia who prevents Fielding-Roth — her company — from jumping on the Thalidomide bandwagon, hut she isn't so lucky in keeping the company's own anti-morning sickness drug off the market a decade and a half later. Not her fault, of course, but that of an embittered and mostly-failed research director who blackmails an alcoholic FDA official.

Celia meets ber husband when, as a neophyte in the business, she manages to lay her hands on an unapproved, experimental drug that she sees at once will save the life of an otherwise doomed patient of this terribly attractive physician. It is the terribly attractive physician whom she marries, and they live happily ever after, more or less, despite everything else that goes on.

Al one point along the way the perfect Celia suddenly bops into bed with a scientist she discovered in England who has set out to find a cure for Alzheimer's disease, with which his mother is afflicted. This one-night stand is designed, I suppose, to show us that dear Celia is human, but it is jarringly out of character.

There is precious little real action in this latest Hailey potboiler. Indeed the pot never gets much past simmer. Celia's own character is too pure to be burdened by much conflict in her personal life.

Oh sure, the company official -her mentor, who won't listen to her concerns about the anti-morning sickness drug — kills himself after his daughter gives birth to a grandchild brain-damaged by the drug, but that was pre-dictable, and the character was so one-dimensional that you really don't care.

And oh yes, there is a sadistic research scientist who lets the laboratory mice suffer.

and British animal rights people are depicted as mindless vandals, but that all takes about three pages.

The wicked scientist's life's work turns out to be a dud, whereas the good scientist (the one who beds Celia) marries a humane lab assertant, lives happily ever after and discovers peptide that not only cures Alzheimer's, but is also both a safe weight-loss drug and a power ful aphrodisiac.

Now that might be strong medicine. "Strong fedicine," however, isn't.

Sandy Rovner writes a column for The Wash. ington Post's Health section.

On the diagramed deal, there are several possible reasons for raising partner's major suit to the five level: a est to bid a slam with control of the opponent's suit; a slam invitation focusing on the quality of the trump suit, or an advance save, made in the belief that the opponents can make a high-level contract.

The last of these was in the mind of North when he jumped to five hearts over the Michaels cue bid, which showed length in spades and a singleton club king — perhaps one chance in 20. showed length in spades and a minor suit.

South was not sure about his partner's intentions. He should perhaps have been warned by the favorable vulnerability, but be continued to slam. And spreading some confusion in his turn, he bid six diamonds rather than six hearts.

spade king choosing to believe exercising remarkable te-that South's six-diamond bid straint, refrained from comindicated a void. But even if ment. that were so, it is unlikely that a spade lead would be necessary to defeat the slam.

South gratefully won the spade ace, but it seemed a temspade ace, but it seemed a temporary reprieve. To make the stan at this point he needed to find an even trump split and a singleton club king — perhaps & K 185

But it all came to pass. He claimed the slam. He announced correctly that he would play clubs, eventually developing two club winners for diamond discards.

When North corrected to six hearts, expecting to be doubled, the bidding ended and West had to lead. He led the monds with astonishment, but Another Night of the Long Knives International Herald Tribune is the wildest of all my dreams for LONDON — The president was ght. We ain't seen nothing yet.

Turkey to knock out England," retored Turkish Manager Candan right. We ain't seen nothing yet. Anyone who dismisses soccer's Tarhan. unacceptably violent urge, with the dozen or more players ordered off in Europe last Wednesday, lives in Cloud-Cuckoo-Land. This week's stakes are higher, as will be boots and fists unless refereeing becomes an art transformed. Nobody seems above gun law. Last week, on the day we lauded Kenny Dalglish as a model of re-straint under pressure, be got himself sent off for doing on the pitch what hooligans do off it. Dalglish was fouled from behind, which probably has hap-pened in most of his 65 European matches for Celtic and Liverpool and in his 95 internationals for Scotland. He was shown the red card for the first time, after going for an assailant's throat in a Champions' Cup match. In times past, Dalglish would have found the moment to exact cold retribution; his explanation for brawling last week was that Benfica defender Pietra had trodden on him and then head-butted

Whatever the provocation, the referee had no option other than to eject both. But he would no more have punished the initial villainous kick than did another ref, in London, who smiled benignly after Tottenham's Graham Roberts had cynically hacked Bruges's Jan Cuelemans out of a UEFA Cup match.

When it comes to the snide, systemade destruction of an opponent's skill, referees alas seldom see anything. So-called hard men, paid to brutalize the game, will be sent 1984-85: winning games and re-storing the franchise to its lofty tories, winning only 16 of 40 in the out to perform during seven World Cup qualifying games on Wednes-day — Austria vs. the Netherlands, Denmark vs. Ireland, Northern Ireland vs. Finland, Portugal vs. Sweden, Scotland vs. Spain, Turkey vs. England and Wales vs. Iceland --followed on Saturday by Luxembourg vs. East Germany and Cy-We're playing a defensive style of prus vs. Hungary.

Some of those games take soccer into volatile cities. For over a year, the long knives have been shar-pened in anticipation of England's visit to Istanbul and Spain's to Glasgow.

Turkey's oaturally bot beads have been stirred by both camps. England's captain, Bryan Robson, pronounced the minute the draw was made: "The trip to Turkey may be more awkward than the match his sixth of the season at 17:07 of when they've done well and when itself." The comment coursed like a the middle period. The Canocks they've slowed down." (UPI, AP) scimitar to the Turkish jugular. "It

Two months ago the English openly accused the Turks of deception. "We will be on our guard," said Manager Bobby Rohson, "against any last-minute switch of venue from Istanbul. We will triple-check our hotel and training arrangements because after what just happened, I feel cheated." Following normal "spying" procedure. Robson arranged to see Turkey play the Soviet Union. The Turks informed London that the match was cancelled, and then secretly played at another venue. Robson missed that one, but caught up with Turkey to witness R demoralizing home defeat to Fin-land — despite the fact that on the morning of the match four Finland players had mysterious bouts of stomach trouble.

Nevertheless, Robson all but crowed with delight. From what he saw, Turkey, despite lavishing £150,000 (about $190,000) for midence from former West Gerguidance from former West German national Coach Jupp Derwall, was disorganized and ripe to be trounced by the aerial power of Mark Hateley.

Hateley, dubbed Attila Hateley

after his towering form with AC Milan, was written up as England's new god after scoring twice in a 5-0 thrashing of Finland. "We had no chance in the air," admitted Finnish defender Aki Lahtinen, "and Turkey will have even less. The goalkeeper is weak and the back four jittery."

Perhaps things were too neatly stacked. Hateley, as was bound to happen, has been spiked by the Italian boot. Turin sweeper Giovanni Francini caught him with what Hateley says was a fair tackle on Sunday, but the rearranged anatomy of Hateley's right knee rules him out for the next two

Still, England has taken out of mothballs a replacement who, at 33, gives a fair impersonation of the roaring lion. "At my age," says Peter Withe, "you don't just savor internationals. You savor every match." And England, assuming nothing befalls it en route to the stadium, seems to think it oeeds only bang the ball to old Pete to cut

Meanwhile, over in Glasgow, the Scots are acutely aware of the dan-seemed the sensible choice. I've never had a passport nor a decent suit, and this will be the longest I've been away from home."

The lad ain't seen nothing yet.

DEFA will decide Thursday whether to oullify Celoc's victory, which was made and marred in the 72d minute when Tommy Burns scored the winner. He clashed with the Vienna goalkeeper and caught defender Richard Kienast with his elbow; when the Austrian thumped him, the terrace lout's bottle struck Rapid substitute Rudi Weinhofer.

What sheltered lives some young capitalists lead. Everything in Tur-Just the time, one would have thought, for the Spanish kings of key, for example, will surprise and perhaps change Stuart McCall. Un-til recently, this flame-haired 20cynicism to arrive in Glasgow. The fiesty Burns will not be on Scotland's team, but Dalglish presumyear-old was known only to Third Division Bradford City. But last ably will be, and so will Graeme Souness, currently earning a toughweek be received calls, 10 minutes guy reputation even in the Italian apart, to play for Scotland's under-21s against Spain and for England's under-21s in Turkey.

Elsewhere it may take more than he says. "I was petrified, shaking. My parents are Scots and brought earmuffs and ankle protectors to enjoy your soccer. Some may be me up as a Scotland supporter, but I was born in Leeds and England wise to watch their backs, their minds, even their integrity.

Kees Rijvers, having struggled to rebuild a youthful Dutch team, is removed now that the disciplinarinn/wanderer Rinus Michels is back. Michels will manage a Netherlands challenge in the hard, pragmatic duel against Austria in Vien-

Denmark, aware that no one takes it lighly any more, must re-cover from defeat in Switzerland to see off the Southern Irisb for whom Liam Brady and Kevin Sheedy are extraordinarily creative.

Revenge motivates Wales — with lan Rush fit to partner Manchester United's Mark Hughes against leeland. But over half the Icelandic force that beat Wales in Reykjavik are absent because of players on duty for West German

Learning to Like Cuisine

By Russell Baker N EW YORK — One of the crepe before I could get a fork into it. Later I learned that's how this in New York is eat cuisine. I recommend it to everybody.

When I first moved here I still ate food, even though people all around me were eating cuisine. In this I was trying to remain loyal to my roots back home, where my folks had eaten food for genera-

When I told them I was moving to New York, they took it hard. "I guess when you come back you won't be eating food any more." Aunt Phyllis said. "You'll be eating that there culsine."

"Don't you believe it. Aunt Phyllis." I said. "You can take a boy out of the country, but you can't make him eat cuisine

"Don't go up there talking like a hick." Aunt Phyllis said. "If you must spout clichès, at least get them right. That one goes, You can take a gentleman out of the country, but you can't take the country out of a gentleman."

Anyhow, I came to New York predisposed against cuisine. People would phone and say, "Will you come to dinner," and I would say, "What are you going to serve," and they'd say, "Just a little perfectly exquisite cuisine," and I'd say, Thanks, hut I've got something to do that night."

Naturally, I couldn't hold out forever. One night the people downstairs invited me in and served something I just couldn't get enough of. "What is this stuff?" I

"Braised capers," came the answer, "That's what we call cuisine." I was hooked. If that was what cuisine tasted like, the folks back home could have their food, Before long I was just as excited about new cuisine developments as the most-hardened New Yorker.

When news came that Fenelon, the chef at Jete la Plume a Nez. had butterfly crepe that, when pierced cooked successfully only over a bed with a knife, emitted dozens of bril- of live coals on which two swamis liant little hutterflies to share your else to experience the ultimate in plements quickly dubbed "la cui-

I used to think it was silly having to eat things like chanterelles, foie gras, chervil, tortellini, canard au fruits de mer, fromage mit caraway seeds and beige strudel mit die Tür aufgemacht, schwein! But that was just because they were hard to pronounce, and the reason they were hard to pronounce, of course, was that they came from abroad. They were imported, just like Japanese cars. I ligured everything had to be imported or it couldn't qualify as real cuisine.

Now, of course, I know hetter, I can have a dozen New York cuising veterans in to dinner and serve them rutabaga Wellington basted with hallpark mustard and every one of them will phone next day to get my recipe. This is because there also exists something called "la cui-sine Americano." which requires no imports whatever. I am not saying that cuisine will be everybody's cup of tea. Or pound of salad sprinkled liberally with ground goat cheese, if I may shift to cuisine metaphor. What do say, though, is that if you don't eat cuisine you're going to have a hard time making conversation in New York, because New Yorkers talk about their eating the way most people talk about their tax shelters, and unless you can talk of some new trick for pampering in-testines, you're not going to get much of an audience in New York.

'Stranger Than Paradise': Offbeat America

By Paul Attanasio ashington Post Service

N EW YORK — There is no experience in the movies like the collective discovery of a funny, luminously real and utterly original new film by an anonymous young talent. A film like Jim Jarmusch's "Stranger Than Paradise."

Jarmusch recently entered the most important week of his life. The response to his film's pre-miere at the New York Film Festival would determine whether he would be mentioned in the same breath as Cinematic Biggies or whether he would be just another poseur relegated to the East Village dumpster

It was a week that would decide whether he would be able to work as a filmmaker full time, or whether he would go back to being a process server, poster hang-er, free-lance film editor and usher at the St. Mark's Theater.

Jarmusch stood in the hallway of a cable television studio with John Lurie, one of the stars of the film, waiting to he interviewed for a program called "The New Tomorrow's Television Tonight." Jarmusch blends into the scene as much as a 31-year-old man with completely white hair can blend in Tall and gaunt, he wears only black: black shirt, black trousers, black sneakers, black cotton sweater.

"I only know two people who even have cable TV." Jarmusch says, watching the monitor. 'I did 30 interviews in Cannes alone," be says, "And 10 around Europe, And 10 here. So 50. It's really starting to depress me. Especially when they say, 'What's your next project?' It's like, 'Shut up. It's none of your business. What's your next interview?" It's Jarmusch's turn in the studio. The camera starts to roll. The Interviewer predicts "Stranger" will be "an offbeat hit."

"Now the movie's very stylisti-cally inventive," he says. "It's in black and white..." Lurie and Jarmusch seem bored. A clip from the movie shows a funny, deadpan colloquy about TV dinners between a Hungarian girl and a down-and-out New York hustler,

The two men leave the studio; followed by the interviewer. He suggests to Jarmusch that his film is "New Wave."

"It's supposed to be anti-New Wave," Jarmusch demurs. "But it came across as New Wave," the interviewer insists. "We failed!" Jarmusch says, laughing.

Jarmusch lives on Prince Street in the East Village. One Tuesday. a pony-tailed reporter from Heavy Metal magazine scales the four flights to his apartment.

Jarmusch's girlfriend and a fellow New York University Film School product, Sara Driver, the producer of "Stranger Than Paradise," is on the phone. At the last minute, they have had to ob-tain rights to Screamin' Jay Haw-kins' "I Put a Spell on You," and the five-figure sum, in the context of "Stranger's" low budget — a little over $100,000 — has given everyone a little last-minute acid stomach.

The apartment is as spare as the film. The Heavy Metal reporter sits on an automobile seat perched on a steel crate while Jarmusch, squats on the edge of a rocking chair.

The interviewer asks about the unique style of the film: each scene is composed of a single shot (there is no editing within the scene), and the screen blacks out between scenes (like Samuel Beckett, whose mood pervades "Stranger Than Paradise," Jar-musch does as much with nothing as he does with something). "I think the black spaces really are a contradiction," Jarmusch says. "Formally they form a sepa-"Umnahmmmm," says Heavy

"But as the film progresses, they become interconnected instead of separated."

"Right" Jarmusch had his unhappy childhood in Akron, Ohio, where his father worked for Goodyear and his mother, before her marriage, was the film critic for the Akron Beacon-Journal. "Everyone I knew in Akron wanted to leave," Jarmusch remembers,

Jarmusch left for Northwestern's journalism school, but something about the formulas of news writing rankled him, and after a semester he was at Columbia, studying literature, Four years later he went downtown to New York University.

"I'm an American," Jarmusch He surfed in the swirling tides of New Wave rock 'n' roll, playing with a band called the Del-By-100

"At that time everyone in New York had a band," Jarmusch recalls. "The idea was that you didn't have to be a virtuoso musician to have a band. The spirit was more important than having technical expertise, and that influenced a lot of filmmakers." Jarmusch's other big influence at the time was the director Nicholas Ray ("Rebel Without a Cause"); Jarmusch became his assistant, "He said, 'If you want to make a film, you can make a film. Don't let anyone tell you it's impossible or that you have to have so much money."

"Stranger Than Paradise" is about a Hungarian girl who has come to the United States and ends up spending time with her cousin Willie, a two-bit grifter. It is as peculiarly American as "The Honeymooners," but it is shot in an ingenious style that Jarmusch says draws on such sources as the Japanese director Yasujiro Ozu, Italian neo-realism, the French Nouvelle Vague, the new German cinema, American B movies and says. "And while I feel that my film formally is very un-American, it's about America, and the characters are very American. I think that's sort of what Stranger Than Paradise' is about, that America is different than other places and there are different ways of thinking about America. I hope this film is a sort of bridge between being American but also having influences, especially formally, from world cinema, non-American cinema."

"Stranger" opened to spirited acclaim at Cannes; the audience applanded in the middle of the screening, and it won the Camera d'Or prize for best first feature

Later, Jarmusch is greeted by someone bearing The New York Times, with Vincent Canhy's review. It begins:

"Jim Jarmusch's 'Stranger
Than Paradise' looks as if it had been left on the windowsill too long...its images appear to have been aged by the sun and hy gen eral neglect until they've faded into a uniform shade of gray." Jarmusch is depressed. He doesn't seem to realize that Canby has gone on to say this is "one of the most original, wonderfully oddball, independent American films to turn up . . . in years." Or that such a blurb ensures success. That his little film could gross millions. That his star is born.

They are: Shirley MacLaine and Gloria Steinem, for turning 50 into something to look forward to; Jane Pauley, for returning to the "Today Show" after twins; Joan Benoit for her gold medal in the first Olympic marathon for women; Geraldine A. Ferraro, "the year's most public case in point that you don't have to choose between career and family". Clara Peller, the ex-manicurist who found fame with the one-liner "Where's the Beef?"; and Cyndi Lamper, the first solo artist in 1984 with three consecutive hit singles in the Top 3 off a debut alhum.

George Burns has a simple rule for performing: "I don't do any-thing on stage that isn't 88 years old." Burns was born in 1896, the same year as the motion picture. "You can be 88 and be very attractive," he said. "A woman who's 50 should dress like she's 50. That's very attractive. If she dresses like she's 25, she'll look 75. I have lines that fit my mouth, so I'm not ashamed to say em. I do some risqué things, but I let the audience guess it."

Britain will honor Charlie Chap-lin, Alfred Hitchcock, Vivien Leigh, David Niven and Peter Sellers, all of whom were born in Britain, on postage stamps next year as a celebration of the country's film indus-

Clare Boothe Luce, the first woman ambassador to a major foreign country and a former member

Dean Martin says that if he con- of Congress, has received the Ray. mond E. Baldwin Public Service Award. The award is given by the University of Bridgeport School of Law in the name of Baldwin, a former state representative, governor, U.S. senator and state chief justice in Connecticut. Luce 81. was ambassador to Italy and was the modern American theater's most successful woman dramatist.

> A federal grand jury investiga-tion of Antoni Gronowicz, author of a book about Pope John Paul II that was withdrawn by its publisher as fraudulent, is an encroachment on free expression, the American Civil Liberties Union and a group of prominent writers charge. The Authors League of America and the Philadelphia branch of the civil liberties union issued a joint statement protesting a subpoena issued for Gronowicz and documents for his book, "God's Broker." "It is not the function of the U.S. government or its grand juries to investi-gate the accuracy of books or other media of expression," the statement said. Gronowicz claims the book is based on interviews with the Pope. Vatican officials deny the interviews took place.

> During a recent concert in Tempe, Arizona, Bruce Springsteen made an impassioned plea for do-nations to the People's Clinic, which serves copper workers who have been striking at Phelps Dodge Corp. in Tempe for 17 months.
> Officials said about $500 was raised. The rock star contributed $10,000. Dr. Jorge O'Leary, who heads the clinic, said he would use some of the donations to buy an Xray machine and give the rest to the city's food bank.

A foundation named in honor of the late Princess Grace of Monaco has named the winners of its first nine U.S. theatrical and dance scholarships. The winners included eight Americans and one Chinese. Runsheng Ying, 23, who is studying with the New York City Ballet. The. ceremony was attended by two of Princess Grace's children, Prince Albert and Princess Stephanic, and by a representative of the British pop singer Elton John, who said he was giving the foundation $50,000.
